

Biography

Tristan Brown is an advocate for our public education system and an active community member.

Tristan grew up in Southern California in a mixed household. His mother, a second-generation Mexican American, worked in the travel and entertainment industry and showed him the importance of education as a very active PTA member. His father spent decades as an international automotive journalist, and helped show Tristan a global perspective on life. He earned his Bachelor's Degree in Government at the University of Redlands.

After college, Tristan began his career advocating for working families, first for homecare workers and later for public school employees. During this time, he went to law school, taking night classes, so he could learn the legal system to help advocate for others, and make our community better. He earned his law degree at the University of the Pacific, McGeorge School of Law with a certificate in Public Law & Policy. Now he works with the California Federation of Teachers, advocating for more money and support for our students in K-12 schools, community colleges, and 4-year higher education universities.

Tristan is a dedicated community member who serves several local Sacramento organizations, including...

- Director Emeritus - New Leaders Council, Sacramento
