“When Hamilton became Washington’s secretary of the treasury, he swiftly arranged the de facto payoff of the officer group at Newburgh, valuing their bonds at par & paying them the interest streams they wanted.

Here was perhaps the clearest signal that the Federalist Party was structured as an alliance between bondholders & military elites, who would use a strong central government as a mechanism to extract money from the farming public. This was Hamiltonian statecraft, & it was modeled on the political system of the Whigs in Great Britain, the party of “monied interests” whose power was anchored by the Bank of England.

“True to their own aristocratic instincts & affiliations, Hamilton and his mentor Morris wanted to insulate decision-making from democratic influence. Morris told Congress that redistributing wealth upward was essential so that the wealthy could acquire ‘those Funds which are necessary to the full Exercise of their Skill and Industry,’ & thereby promote progress. While in office, Hamilton granted a group of proto-venture-capitalists monopoly control over all manufacturing in Paterson Falls, New Jersey, the site of some of the most powerful waterfalls on the East Coast. Hamilton, who captained this group of investors, thought it would power a network of factories he would then control. Among the prerogatives enjoyed by the funders of the Paterson Falls project was the authority to condemn lands & charge tolls, powers typically reserved to governments. More broadly, in the fight to establish a for-profit national bank owned & controlled by investors, he placed control over the currency in the hands of the wealthy, linking it to gold & putting private financiers in charge.” — The Hamilton Hustle, Matt Stoller. The Baffler, March 2017.
